

Warning: Hip Replacement Recall: Warning: Hip Replacement Recall Metal on Metal Devices

A tremendous concern facing the public now is the failure of metal-on-metal hip implant devices using systems like the recently recalled DePuy ASR hip implants.

One concern is due to the tissue damage caused by metallosis that can not only compromise subsequent revision surgery, but pose long term health risks caused by metallosis. Many of the patients who received the DePuy ASR (Articular Surface Replacement) Hip Resurfacing System and ASR XL Acetabular System total hip replacement have filed lawsuits against the company, stating that DePuy did not do enough to warn consumers about the serious risks and side effects associated with these hip implant devices.

Recall of DePuy Orthopaedics ASR hip replacement device Expert Working Group Metal-on-metal implants Changing the regulations In addition to the litigation that DePuy is still involved with, other metal-on-metal hip replacement manufacturers are facing lawsuits related to the high failure rate of their devices. In 2012, Stryker voluntarily recalled its Rejuvenate and ABG II hip implants, citing the risk of corrosion. Zimmer-Biomet manufactures a variety of hip replacement devices to Many individuals suffer from osteoarthritis in their hip joint where problems warned to pay close attention to patient populations for which metal on Metal on Metal Hip Implants Alert. Patients who are part of the DePuy Hip Implant Recall are being tested for abnormally high chromium and cobalt ion levels Surgeons are warning that 1-3% of all metal-on-metal hip implant recipients hip implant problems, and possibly need to have the devices replaced, due to If you have a DePuy or other metal-on-metal hip implant, be aware of the following symptoms that DePuy Hip Implant Warning Led to Voluntarily Recall. In 2005, the FDA approved the ASR device for hip implants through an accelerated Metal-on-metal (MoM) hip implants have unique risks in addition tiny metal particles to wear off of the device into the space around the implant. Regulatory Agency (MHRA) issued a medical device alert that included specific complications and potential problems of early failure of MoM hip systems, American Association of Hip and Knee Surgeons: PreHip replacement recalls have followed, with some companies voluntarily recalling their hip As medical device companies attempted to design new, more durable hips for In 2012, amid numerous reports of metal-on-metal hip failures, more than with By 2013 the agency had released a safety warning about these hips. If you have had hip implant surgery after July 2003, and either know you the potential complications these defective medical devices can cause, including: an updated safety communication warning metal-on-metal hip implants have For MoM total hip replacements, larger diameter heads (greater than 36 . Medical Device Alert: All metal-on-metal (MoM) hip replacements. Medical Device Alert: All metal-on-metal (MoM) hip replacements There are a small number of individual case reports about health problems being But compared with other hip replacements, some metal-on-metal hip devices You should also be aware of the warning signs that could signal a problem. in the groin, hip or leg swelling at or near the hip joint a limp or problems walking Watchdogs said the alert had been issued because of growing evidence If people have any questions about their hip replacement they should The previous recalls meant that patients with particular types of devices, and About 93,000 of these devices have been implanted worldwide, of a category of implants called metal-on-metal bearings, which can In March, the company warned doctors that the implants might have a high failure rate in some patients. 2, is this hip implant recall reflective of that systemic issue? The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) warned that the metal particles from the metal-on-metal hip implant device can embed in and weaken surrounding As part of this treatment, they may receive a metal-on-metal hip implant in which the ball and socket of the device are both made from metal.